I disagree with the statement. The first reason is promotion of capable person. In Japan, there are more men working for the Government and companies than women. The women promotion law could make talented men impossible to get a higher position and instead less capable women could be promoted. The second reason is that the scope of application of the law cannot be defined exactly. Blind application of the law would lead to ignoring the circumstances of the companies. The women promotion law cannot solve the problem because it would lose the sight of the purpose of the gender-equal society.
